"Two Soldiers," by Captain Charles King, auther of "Dunraven Ranch," "The Colonel's Daughter," "From the Ranks," "The Deserter," etc., is the complete novel in Lippincott's Magazine for March, and is characterized by the same dash and charm of style which make all Captain King's stories such entertaining reading. Love and war, two topics that age cannot stale, form the theme of the tale, and the characters of two soldiers, one a brave and honers of two soldiers, one a brave and hon-orable man, the other a dastard in both love and war, are brought into sharp contrast. The dastard appears to succontrast. The dastard appears to succeed at first by clever wire-pulling, but virtue triumphs in the end. There is a capital description of Indian fighting, and the story is full of action, and is bright and healthy throughout.

Edgar Fawcett contributes a remarkable poem of some length, entitled "The Tears of Tullia." It is a touching and beautiful story of the triumph of love.

On the evenings of February 13 and 15, ralls and timber were laid across the track a mile east of Capac, in order to wreck the passenger train, but a slow freight going through first not much damage was done.
